

What's small, loud, and keeps buzzing around your head?

The Answer's technically a bug, but also un-technically a child.

It started earlier this morning when you almost had a heart attack after waking up to a tiny nose and big eyes pressed against your face. It continued when you were in the shower and had to leave one hand out because your four-year-old was in one of their clinging-to-you-like-spider-clings-to-their-web kind of moods. In the mood that requires you to wash your hair with one hand. And when you sat down to eat your burnt toast you had the privilege of having your child sit on your lap and consistently bump their head into your chin as they played with their trucks.

All day long you hear the skittering of tiny little feet.

And just like a bug, your kid won't leave you alone. Somehow wherever you go, your child goes too. You hear the nonstop buzz of their questions and observations.

You see them turn your laundry room into a hive of crayons and construction paper. You watch in horror as they transform into the Queen Bee during your noon meeting.

Easy, dress your kid as the bug they are. Now we aren't talking about those bugs that sting or bite or ooze goo on you. We're talking butterflies, because although your kid's a bug at least they're cute. And sure, you can't seem to hide from them, but you can't deny the beauty and joy they bring to your life.

And when others see that bug on their shirt they'll know you need some help. Even if it's a quick conversation with your kid at play group so you can use the bathroom in peace or planning a playdate so you have a few hours to yourself. That beautiful, colorful, wild butterfly on their shirt will serve as an SOS call to all the other parents you pass that day. This t-shirt will give you just what you need to regain sanity and get a quick refresh.

But don't worry, bugs sleep too.

So when the day's over and you finally get a break from that sweet bug that followed you around all day, take a sigh, and remember all the amazing things your kid does. Maybe that means dressing them in a four-leaf clover dress because you really lucked out that they are yours. Or dress them in a construction truck shirt because they really build you up with all the sweet "I love yous" and hand holds. Whatever the occasion is and whoever your kid is going to be that day, trust Cat and Jack to give them all the clothes they need to show who they are. From t-shirts to dresses, we'll take care of your bug throughout their childhood metamorphosis so you can watch them grow into the amazing person they are destined to become.
